One of the 57 Varieties

THEATERS

AT THE ORPHEUM.

Not since the old "Henrietta," Bronson Howard's famous comedy, with Stuart Robson in the cast, held the boards twenty years ago, has a local audience been more delighted with a theatrical performance than that of the "New Henrietta," which was presented at the Orpheum theatre last night by five of America's foremost histrionic and a brilliant supporting company. It is also probable that the pioneer playhouse was never filled with a more cultured and appreciative audience, showing that the passing of the years has not taken one whit from the liking of local play-goers for the best in art.

The power of "The New Henrietta," as written by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, with the old comedy as a foundation, lies in the multiplicity of its unexpected denouements, which keep the audience keenly interested and amused from curtain to curtain. And more than the play itself, as a drawing card, is the fact that William H. Crane, Thomas W. Ross, Maclyn Arbuckle, Amelia Bingham and Mabel Taliaferro essay the principal roles.

According to the plot, the "Henrietta" is a rich gold mine, which is known from the start by all of the characters, but Bertie Van Alstyne, To Bertie, Henrietta is a dancing girl by whom he is attracted, and then there is a third Henrietta, a poor girl who is a victim of Mark Turner, a brother-in-law of Bertie.

Nicholas Van Alstyne, in his youth, is saved from death in the western wilds by the father of Agnes Gates. The two men become fast friends and when Gates dies, Van Alstyne takes the little girl into his home and she becomes one of the delights of his life. He later becomes a multi-millionaire operator on Wall street stock exchange, but his son, Bertie, turns out to be a flop. His son-in-law, Mark Turner, shows signs of skill in finance and the old man decides to retire and turns the management of his affairs over to Turner. The latter, who hates his father-in-law for having taken a patronizing attitude toward him, plans to play false to his trust, to ruin Van Alstyne and make himself wealthy.

Agnes falls in love with Bertie and the two become betrothed, much to the disgust of Van Alstyne senior, whose love for Agnes, when he finds she is determined to wed his worthless son, presents Bertie with a check for a million dollars. Mrs. Cornelia Opydyke, a fashionable widow, is introduced to the financier by Rev. Murray Hilton who, with her, seeks advice with regard to a profitable investment. Both get the advice and the widow gets the love of Van Alstyne. She already has that of the minister and the efforts of the two elderly gentlemen to win her add keen humor to the play.

Bertie turns out to be a genuine hero, though he fails to thoroughly realize it, in one big scene, saving his sister from a knowledge of her husband's perjury at the risk of his own and Agnes' happiness, and in another, saving the Van Alstyne fortune. The play ends with the banishment of the son-in-law, Turner, and with an early double wedding in prospect, with Van Alstyne senior and Mrs. Opydyke and Bertie and Agnes as the happy couples.

In the role of Nicholas Van Alstyne, William H. Crane showed that his place as dean of American legitimate comedians is still secure and that he has power not only to draw laughter, but tears, from an audience. A proof of the latter was shown in a scene between himself, Miss Taliaferro and Miss Rosalind Coghlan, in the second act, a touch of the real in dramatic art, that is rarely achieved. In a comedy play, his work was as delightful as ever and dramatic strength was there when needed.

Thomas W. Ross, who essayed the difficult task of walking in the footsteps of Stuart Robson in the role of Bertie, performed it in a manner that would have been a credit even to that gifted player. The character is an unusually quaint one and Mr. Ross' portrayal of it kept the audience convulsed with laughter. He can easily be classed as one of the country's most promising comedians.

To see and hear Mabel Taliaferro, who was cast as Agnes Gates, is to be surprised and won all in the same instant. Slight of figure, very slight in fact, with her first spoken lines and bit of action, Miss Taliaferro claims attention equal to that of her costars, making up what she seems to lack in stature with a remarkable voice and an appealing ingenuousness, that at once wins her audience. She has strength, too, and in the role of Agnes, she accepts the opportunity of using all of her histrionic gifts with telling effect.

Amelia Bingham, who was out of the cast of the "New Henrietta" for several weeks on account of illness, rejoined it yesterday, a fact upon which—with no discredit to Laura Hope Crews, who so ably handled the role while Miss Bingham was incapacitated—last night's audience congratulated itself. A handsome woman, with the perfected art of actress and comedienne at her command, Miss Bingham was ideally cast as Mrs. Opydyke, her work being a delight and making that of her fellow stars even more delightful than it otherwise might have been.

Maclyn Arbuckle, one of the "biggest" in bulk as well as in other ways—male stage favorites of the present day, came in for a big share of appreciation for work well done. He was cast as the Rev. Murray Hilton and was responsible for a large share of the comedy.

Praise of the production of the "New Henrietta" would be incomplete without mention of Miss Rosalind Coghlan, gifted actress with a pleasing stage appearance and a cultured voice; James J. Ryan, a clever actor; Arthur S. Hull, a very likeable actor, and Miss Zeffie Tilbury, Malcolm Bradley, Edward Poland and Harry Roberts, who completed the cast.

Individually or together, the five stage stars who visited Ogden last night in "The New Henrietta," with an equally strong supporting company, would be welcome to return at any time and would undoubtedly be greeted by a capacity audience.

STORY OF AN OGDEN

BOY MADE FAMOUS

This is a story of Ogden that the old timers remember but that most of the Ogdensites have never heard. It is a bit of interest that should be remembered in connection with our schools and Lester Park.

Years ago a mother brought her children from England to Ogden. One of the boys had been a member of a boys' choir in England and he soon became a general favorite as a singer in Ogden. As he grew to manhood he became janitor of Ogden's first school building, the old Central school, and "care taker" of Lester park.

It was his custom to sing at his work, and one afternoon about 4 o'clock he was singing while working in Lester park when two strangers passed through. They stopped and listened, then came and talked with him and asked him to go with them at once to the opera house and sing there. The "care taker" of the park dropped his tools and went to the opera house and dressed in his rough clothes sang several songs. The men were Primrose and West of the Minstrel world. That night at midnight the "care taker" of Lester park and the janitor of Central school left Ogden with the company and never returned. Central school was without a janitor and Lester park without a keeper. The park tools were found by his successor that week lying just as he had dropped them when he went to "sing a few songs for the strangers" but Charley Kent never came back to live in Ogden. He traveled for four years with Primrose and West and was one of the most popular singers of the peoples songs. He returns to Ogden today to sing tonight at the supper musicale in First Presbyterian church.

EXAMINATION IN FOREST SERVICE

G. G. Anderson, connected with the office of operation, forest service, Washington, D. C., arrived in Ogden from Missoula, Mont., and left immediately for Salt Lake City, where he will attend the examination given by the supervisor to applicants for the position of assistant forest ranger.

Upon his return from Salt Lake, Mr. Anderson will spend the remainder of this week in the district office, taking up with the various assistant district foresters matters of the underwood.

"The drama should be made the great moulder of public opinion. It should have its place alongside of the newspaper and the magazine in creating public sentiment. But the only way we can have great plays is by encouraging them. Attend them not merely with the idea of being amused but with learning and being instructed. The drama is not life, but it condenses life and gives us a bird's-eye view of life."

FRESH COFFEE

Roasted every day at our store and sold within 24 hours from the time that it is roasted; it is blended here, it is sold here. Efforts are made by coffee packers to keep their roasts fresh by packing in air tight cans. But there is only one really fresh coffee, that is the kind that is roasted and sold the same day. That's the kind we sell, from 30 to 40 cents a pound.
